Cheap gas and electric

With the price cap due to increase to £1,738 from 1 January next year and our energy usage also increasing during the winter months, this is a good time to switch to a fixed deal. But it's not the only option out there when making sure you're not paying more than you need to for your energy.

Although lower prices have allowed suppliers to reintroduce some deals, they are still much more expensive than before the energy market crisis. This is because there are still ongoing global conflicts, like the Ukraine-Russia and Israel-Gaza wars, that can dramatically affect the price of gas imports and therefore the overall price we pay for our energy.

While energy prices are predicted to stay high for the next few years, it's more difficult to predict what will happen to them in the short term. EDF predicts that the next price cap (coming into effect in January 2025) will increase slightly, so prices will stay high throughout the winter. The situation could change quickly, though, so keep an eye on market news if you're thinking of switching.

However, your total energy bill is highly unlikely to be £1,717. You could pay more than the cap if you live in a bigger house or use more energy. You could also pay less if you use less.

Our system will use publicly-available data to pre-fill some of your details. You might also need to add a couple of details about your plan, such as your usage in kWh and the plan name, so it might help to have a bill to hand so you can refer to it.

The deals currently available on Uswitch will appear in the results table, along with their estimated annual costs which are based on your usage details. You'll be able to filter by plan type (dual fuel or electricity-only), rate type (fixed or variable), payment method and other features.

Once you've found a deal you'd like to switch to, confirm your switch and we'll do the rest - you don't have to speak to either supplier! Your switch should be completed within five days with no interruption to your supply. You'll also have a 14-day cooling-off period where you can cancel for free if you change your mind.
