Jason Hahn is a former Human Interest and Sports Reporter for PEOPLE. He started at PEOPLE's Los Angeles Bureau as a writer and reporter in 2017 and interviewed the likes of Kobe Bryant, Arnold Schwarzenegger and Tom Brady. He has a B.A. in English from the University of California, Berkeley, and a Master's degree in Journalism from Columbia University. He previously worked for Complex Magazine in New York City.

Julie Mazziotta is the Senior Sports Editor at PEOPLE, covering everything from the NFL to tennis to Simone Biles and Tom Brady. She was previously an Associate Editor for the Health vertical for six years, and prior to joining PEOPLE worked at Health Magazine. When not covering professional athletes, Julie spends her time as a (very) amateur athlete, training for marathons, long bike trips and hikes.

News of Brown's death was announced Friday by his wife, Monique Brown, on Instagram. She said that her husband had "passed peacefully last night" in the couple's home in Los Angeles.

"To the world, he was an activist, actor, and football star," Monique wrote. "To our family, he was a loving and wonderful husband, father, and grandfather. Our hearts are broken."

Indeed, Brown was a man of many talents, but the ones he first showcased prominently came on the football field. He fittingly starred for the Cleveland Browns from 1957 to 1965, being named to eight All-Pro teams and winning the NFL MVP three times.

During his career, Brown racked up 2,359 carries for 12,312 yards and 106 touchdowns. He managed to lead the NFL in rushing yards in eight of his nine seasons, led the league in touchdowns in five seasons and recorded seven seasons with at least 1,000 rushing yards.

However, as his wife mentioned, Brown was more than just a football player. He was also a prominent figure in the civil rights movement in the 1960s and founded initiatives like Amer-I-Can, which provides resources to and works to help disadvantaged inner-city youth and ex-convicts.

Additionally, Brown was a successful actor who starred in Westerns and action movies in the 1960s and 1970s. That included films like "The Dirty Dozen", "The Split", "Riot" and "100 Rifles", which included within it one of the earliest interracial love scenes in Hollywood between him and Raquel Welch. He also notably starred in "Any Given Sunday."

Brown was a heroic figure in the eyes of many. He also had a track record of violence against women. The Pro Football Hall of Famer was accused of assault on four separate occasions.
