 The developer, Bonnet Driver, indicated that the app"s privacy practices may include handling of data as described below. For more information, see the developer"s privacy policy.

If you have a compatible charger (such as an Indra or Ohme) then you need to link the charger to your OVO online account. You don"t need the additional Charge Anytime app. Ohme have made step by step instructions on how to set up Charge Anytime.

We recommend opening your OVO online account in Google Chrome, and following these steps: (If this doesn"t work the first time please try this using a new "Incognito" window)

NOTE - If you "Boost" or "Max Charge" on the charger to charge immediately, this will bypass Charge Anytime and charge the car at your normal unit rate. See this topic for more details:

Indra has more than one platform to manage their chargers, and their own app doesn"t support Charge Anytime yet. They"ll need to move your charger over to the platform that does support Charge Anytime.

Yes and No it was helpful that guide. That was a long complicated journey when we first had the charger installed so as a firm believer of it ain"t broke don"t touch it, I"m not taking that journey again. We just need a second device set up with the details so we both get to see the status of the charger.

While my "compatible" Renault Zoe is still present but in advance of its replacement by an "incompatible" BYD Dolphin, when my "compatible" Ohme ePod charger is installed in a couple of days, should I uninstall the Charge Anytime app from my Android phone and do all the "connecting stuff" through the Ohme app? Incidentally, that "Offers and Upgrades" menu item is not present if using Chrome (incognito or otherwise) on a PC and on an Android phone appears just as "Offers".

You"ll probably want to disable all EV"s in the Charge Anytime app just before you get the charger installed - I"d also recommend deleting the app as well since you wouldn"t need it after that. Once the Charger is installed and linked up to CA, please use the Ohme app for ALL scheduling so that everything works as intended.

Just had Indra Smart Pro charger installed, and linked with OVO Call Anytime. Indra say there is only a web-based app to control charging. I have this but cannot set it up to charge the car for more than a few minutes after midnight before it shuts off. Last 2 nights, it didn"t charge at all.

The Indra app seems to confuse "tariff" and "period" - no guidance as to what is meant by "period". And the "period" shows a "start time" but it"s not editable.

Has anyone any experience of setting up this Indra app, and can give guidance? Grateful for any help - Indra Customer Service don"t work weekends.   Keith Drury
